- Type A (Natural) is the most valuable and rare: natural, untreated jadeite (traditional surface waxing only).
- Primary value drivers are Color, Transparency, and Texture (fine-grain 'lao-pit' textures with vivid emerald-green and strong glow command top prices).
- Imperial Green segments with high translucency achieve the highest retail values globally.
- Auction benchmarks demonstrate demand: iconic jadeite jewels have achieved multi-million-dollar results in Hong Kong, with the Hutton-Mdivani necklace selling for US$27.4M (Sotheby's Hong Kong, 2014).
- Treated jadeite (Type B/C) trades at a small fraction of Type A values; serious collectors insist on natural Type A.
- Hong Kong's legal standard defines "Fei Cui" and "Natural Fei Cui," reinforcing strict disclosure and certification expectations in the main jadeite market.

Your Stone Positioning

At 3,300 carats (~660g), translucent Type A Fei Cui with vivid internal glow offers potential for high-end cabochons, pendants, or bangles. Based on current market dynamics, rough value is estimated at $3.3M – $16.5M, with finished goods potential of $15M – $100M+ depending on cutting yield and concentration of imperial-green zones.
